About Sade Elhawary:

Born and raised in Los Angeles, Sade is the eldest daughter of immigrants and attended local public schools, becoming the first in her family to graduate college. After earning a bachelor's degree from UCLA and a master's from Harvard Graduate School of Education, she joined the founding faculty of the Nelson Mandela School for Social Justice. Throughout her 12-year career at Community Coalition, Sade has recruited and developed future social justice leaders. She played a key role in creating the Fremont High School Wellness Center and helped pass the School Climate Bill of Rights to combat racial profiling in schools. Recently, she served as Youth Engagement Campaign Manager for Karen Bass's historic mayoral victory. Sade's advocacy prioritizes education and youth workforce development, shaped by her experiences as a youth mentor, college counselor, and teacher in low-income communities. In 2019, Sade became a foster parent to Makailah, a youth she mentored, helping her graduate high school and start college. Sade's lifelong dedication to justice and empowerment drives her commitment to creating opportunities and equitable outcomes for future generations.
